Language requirements: English 6/English B from Swedish Upper Secondary School or the equivalent level of an internationally recognized test, for example TOEFL, IELTS, or alternatively a bachelor's degree from an education held in English.

Learning outcomes

On successful completion of the course the student will be able to:

Knowledge and understanding

- describe the various feminist approaches to development and gender;
- present the major academic debates on gender and development both from Western and Non-western perspectives;

Competence and skills

- analyse gender in relation to some of the key sites of 'development', such as the state, development institutions, civil society, etc.;
- analyse how gender interrelates with the main areas of inquiry in the study of globalization, development and social transformation;
- critically analyse development themes about rights, identity and the environment;

Judgement and approach

- critically discuss how the different feminist approaches influence international development policy and cooperation.

Course content

The course is divided into two parts:

Part 1: Theorizing Gender in Development, Globalisation and Social Transformation (7.5 credits)

This part introduces the students to feminist critiques and approaches to development. Consequently, the activities consider the interfaces of theories of gender and development. Students engage with gender identities, relations, roles and hierarchies that influence development and globalization approaches. Part 1, thus, highlights Western and Third World feminist scholarship around development that considers women as agents of social transformation.

Part 2: The Politics of Implementing Development (7.5 credits)

This second part of the course is concerned with the policies and implementation strategies for development. It examines a range of gender issues in global institutional development policies and activist engagements. It highlights how gender issues in development are addressed in major multilateral institutions of global governance. Students will encounter the challenges and opportunities in the implementation of development policies and their effects on gender relations.

Form of teaching

Learning activities in the course include lectures, seminars and team work.

Language of instruction: English

Assessment

The examinations consist of individually written assignments, active participation in seminars and team work.

The number of examination occasions can for resource reasons be limited to a minimum of 5 occasions for each examination item.

If a student, who has failed the same examined element on two occasions, wishes to change examiner before the next examination session, such a request is to be submitted to the department in writing and granted unless there are special reasons to the contrary (Chapter 6, Section 22 of Higher Education Ordinance).

In the event that a course has ceased or undergone major changes, students are to be guaranteed at least three examination sessions (including the ordinary examination session) over a period of at least one year, though at most two years after the course has ceased/been changed. The same applies to work experience and VFU, although this is restricted to just one additional examination session.

Grades

The grading scale comprises: Pass with Distinction (VG), Pass (G) and Fail (U).

In order to be rewarded a Pass grade for the course, a Pass grade is required for all examining activities. In order to be rewarded a Pass with Distinction for the course, the student must obtain a Pass with Distinction grade in all take-home examinations, in addition to the criteria for a Pass grade.

Course evaluation

The course coordinator is responsible for systematically and regularly collecting the students' views of the course, and for making sure that the results of the evaluations in different forms are taken into consideration when developing the course. The results and possible changes to the course will be shared with the students who participated in the evaluation and the next class to take the course.
