Course content

The course addresses foreign students with the aim of enlarging their knowledge of Scandinavian society from cultural, historical, and social perspectives. The course is divided into four (4) course units:

The Development of Scandinavia in a European Context, 7, 5 higher education credits

This course offers an introduction to the development of Scandinavian society from a European point of view. The point of departure will be ancient times and early medieval Scandinavian society and mainly concentrating on the development of the modern Scandinavian and Swedish society.

Consumer Culture – From Cheap Jack to Super Malls, 7.5 higher education credits

The course provides both a historical and contemporary understanding of consumption in a Swedish and Scandinavian context, where the sociocultural, experiential, symbolic, and ideological aspects of consumption will be in focus. During the course we will explore theoretical perspectives that address the dynamic relationship between consumer actions, the marketplace, and cultural meanings.

Family and Gender, 7,5 higher education credits

In this course we will investigate and discuss norms and ideas about the contemporary Swedish family. The course will provide a general outlook on the structure, form and mobility of the family, as well as a closer and more thorough analysis of different changes within the family. Although the general focus will be on the Swedish family, we will also position current developments and changes of the family in a global framework.

Swedish Culture – Myths and Realities, 7, 5 higher education credits

The course will examine Swedish everyday culture in a broad sense. Into a chronologically presented warp of society and everyday life from the pre-industrial Sweden until the present, thematic threads such as gender and ethnicity as well as nature and folklore, will be interwoven. The construction of identities is a central issue.
