Course content

In this course, the student develops his/her oral and written language proficiency in French. The course also covers different aspects of culture and society in French-speaking countries. The student is provided with theoretical tools to study and analyse the structure of the French language, French literature and other media. The content of all modules is highlighted by means of current research.

The course consists of the following modules:

Module 1:Grammar and Written proficiency, 7.5 creditsGrammar and Written proficiency, 7.5 hecs*

The module treats basic general and French grammar and aims to develop both students' French language proficiency and their theoretical knowledge of language. A systematic treatment of French morphology and syntax is mixed with practical exercises that train the ability to use basic linguistic notions. To some extent there is a contrastive perspective where systematic differences between Swedish and French grammar are studied by means of translation exercises. The module also treats elementary lexicology on the basis of a central French vocabulary.

The module is divided into French Grammar and Vocabulary, theoretical part (2.5 credits) and French Grammar and Vocabulary (5 credits).

Module 2:French literature: text and other media, 7.5 creditsFrench Literature: Text and other Media, 7.5 hecs*

The module deals with French-speaking literature and film, as well as French-speaking cartoons/graphical novels. The module, which focuses on works from the 20th and 21st centuries, provides literary-critical tools for analysing the studied works partly separately and partly in relation to one another, for example from an adaptation perspective and a social sustainability perspective. The module is divided into Text 1 (4 credits) and Text 2 (3.5 credits).

Module 3:Culture and society, 7.5 creditsCulture and Society, 7.5 hecs*

The module deals with different aspects of French culture and French society, inter alia from a social sustainability perspective and a social perspective. An individual advanced study project on topic of the student's own choice is included in the course. Language proficiency is integrated through vocabulary study and written assignments. The focus is on French social conditions, but the worldwide spread of French is also included as a component. The module is divided into a General part (5.5 credits) and a Specialisation (2 credits).

Module 4:

Oral French, 7.5 credits

Oral Communication, 7.5 hecs

The module includes theoretical (oral communication, phonetics, pronunciation) and practical components (pronunciation and proficiency exercises) which aim to develop students' oral proficiency and listening comprehension. The teaching focuses on oral production, reception and interaction through dialogue, summary and analytical exercises which highlight the different functions of language in society. Students' linguistic and intercultural skills are developed both through their own production and through analysis of their own production and that of others.

The module is divided into Phonetics (1 credit), Oral communication (5.5 credits) and Pronunciation (1 credit).

The course can be read both as a campus course and as a web-based course. There is also a specialisation, which means that the major part of the semester is studied in Lyon.
